I said that my Editorial for the last issue of the journal would be my last one. However that has not been the case because I am responsible for this Special Issue on New Materials and New Uses for Old Materials. The special issue contains papers on steel, concrete and fibre reinforced composites so it has fulfilled its objective. It is a disappointment to me that there is no paper on glass. There could have been more papers on advanced composites but these have been held over to another special issue.

I hope that you find these papers of interest whether you are an academic or a practising engineer. It is often said that the structures field has been researched-out but these papers show that the ingenuity of engineers continues to produce new ideas, new materials and new uses for old materials. Long may it continue.
